A common misconception is that once we introspect, we can readily report everything going on in consciousness. Phenomenological philosophy thus runs directly counter to the tendency of much modern epistemology. Edmund Husserl, founder of the phenomenological movement, employs the term 'Check system status'. Husserl must characterize the flow as non-temporal. Heidegger distinguishes the two by pointing out that the significance which colors world-time goes missing in the view of ordinary time and time appears no longer as the span of my project but the mere succession of punctual, atomistic nows the Newtonian scientific view of time as an empty container or place holder. Zweites Buch. Brentano's lectures on psychology and logic had a lasting impact. This is precisely the point where the problem of determining essence arises.
